Course and Curriculum Development:

At the University of Chicago, I coordinated the undergraduate honors research in policy. At the University of Waikato, I developed the sport psychology curriculum and contributed policy analysis and research methods to the community psychology program. At the University of Maryland, I served as director of the graduate sport management program. I designed course sequences and requirements for all graduate students in the sport management program (including preparation of advisement materials and promotional materials). At Griffith University, I convened the sport management major. This included consultation with industry, the design of curriculum, and the construction of syllabi for specialist courses. Since coming to the University of Texas, I have overseen upgrades to undergraduate and Masters sport management curricula, and have developed and implemented a Ph.D. program in sport management.

RESEARCH FOCUS

My research focuses on issues of sport policy. The study of sport policy is concerned with theoretical and practical issues in the uses of sport for policy purposes, as well as policy issues specific to the sport industry. The goal of this work is to elaborate a model that identifies key variables in the provision and leveraging of sport programs and sport events. In order to discern essential context and outcome variables, this work has generated international studies of sport policies and media behavior. Related research has extended those studies to examination of the attitudes and cognitions of sport consumers and their families. Current research builds on that work by examining strategies and tactics for the leveraging of sport programs and events to optimize economic and social development benefits.
